Who issues Indian passports

The Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) is responsible for issuing passports to Indian citizens. It does so through 37 Passport Offices in India and 208 Indian Missions and Posts abroad.

Why Passport Seva exists

- The Government of India's National e-Governance Plan picked out a set of high-impact "Mission Mode Projects" to improve public services. Reforming passport services is one of them.
- A passport is the basic travel document for anyone going abroad for study, tourism, pilgrimage, medical reasons, business or family visits.
- Economic growth and globalisation pushed up demand for passports in large cities and smaller towns alike, which called for wider reach and availability.
- In response, the MEA launched the Passport Seva Project (PSP) in May 2010.

Vision

To provide every passport-related service with transparent processes, accountability, timeliness, accessibility and reliability, in comfortable surroundings, through a motivated workforce and a digitally overhauled, agile system.

How the project is run

- It is a Public Private Partnership with Tata Consultancy Services, chosen through a public competitive procurement process.
- The MEA keeps the sovereign and fiduciary functions: verifying, granting and issuing passports.
- The MEA also keeps ownership and strategic control of the core assets, including the data.

What the system connects

Passport Seva links government staff across the country on one network and ties in:

- Indian Missions and Posts abroad
- State Police, for physical verification of an applicant's credentials
- India Post, for delivering passports
- UIDAI, for validating an applicant's demographic and biometric details
